Introduction

The Standards of Good Regulation (the Standards) describe the outcomes of good regulation for each of the regulator's regulatory functions.

The evidence framework, set out in the table below, provides examples of evidence that we may review as part of our assessment of a regulator against the Standard. The examples listed within the 'possible evidence' column are not meant to be exhaustive, and because the regulators operate within different contexts, the relevance of different types of evidence will vary from regulator to regulator. For that reason, we do not prescribe a standard set of evidence that we will use to assess all regulators.

As the list of possible evidence is not exhaustive, we may choose to use additional evidence in our assessment. Similarly, we are unlikely to use all possible evidence for all Standards for all regulators. Some information that forms the possible evidence will be publicly available, some will be held by the Authority, and some we will need to seek from regulators. This is highlighted within the framework (see key below), but it should be noted that there will be variation in what is publicly available across the regulators and that these are not categorical. The information we will seek from the regulators will be kept to a minimum, will depend on what we have access to, and where relevant will likely be sought through requests for further information or targeted reviews.

Certain elements within the evidence framework could be relevant across all Standards, for example feedback provided to us by members of the public or third-party organisations. Within the evidence framework, we have only highlighted certain such elements where our experience tells us we are more likely to use this information.

This document will be reviewed in collaboration with the regulators prior to its implementation, and will be subject to regular review once operational.

Key:

- Information likely to be publicly available or held by the Authority
- ❖ Information the Authority will likely need to seek from regulators
